ADD THESE RIDES TO YOUR BUCKET LIST

- 1. Arizona The longest stretch of genuine old U.S. Route 66 is in western Arizona, running 90 lonely miles from Seligman to Kingman alongside the tracks of the Burlington-Northern-Santa Fe railroads, came in the late 19th century, and automotive roads followed in the early 20th. In Seligman lives Angel Delgadillo, who was born there 88 years ago and has been instrumental in preserving the legend of old 66.
- 2. Arkansas The riding around the Buffalo National River in the Ozark Mountains provides endless amusement, and many chances to wash the dust off your wheels. The Newton County seat of Jasper, on State Route 7, provides a focal point, and little roads go off in every direction, including through the Ozark National Forest. A word to the wise: if you are faced with fording a river, it is best to walk the distance first, just so you don't end up with a flooded bike.
- 3. California The Big Sur Highway, carved out of the coast along the Santa Lucia Range for a hundred miles between Cambria and Carmel, is my own favorite road, being almost in my backyard. It's an all-year ride, presuming that winter rains do not cause landslides. Two lanes with an uncountable number of curves, the mountains on one side, the surf frothing along the shore on the other. Don't try sightseeing from the moving motorcycle; stop and then look, it's safer.
- 4. Canada Go way, way east to Nova Scotia, and there at the tip of Cape Breton Island is Cape North, the farthest you can ride on the North American continent, 3,922 MapQuest miles from San Diego. The road looping around the Cape Breton Highlands National Park is called the Cabot Trail (after the 15th-century explorer John Cabot) and, in good weather, the 135-mile loop is one of the more divine rides on the continent. Bad weather? Don't go.
- 5. Colorado Schofield Pass (10,707 feet) is not for the faint of heart, being one of the toughest rides in the Rocky Mountains. Back in the 1880s, when silver was king, the 5-mile Gothic Road was built between the mining sites in Marble and Crested Butte, much of it merely a shelf blasted out of the mountainside that just drops straight down into the Crystal River Canyon. It's a dangerous ride and only the really, really competent should try it (according to Wikipedia, the pass has claimed 12 lives).

5 Tips for PREVENTING MOTORCYCLE ACCIDENTS

Spring has finally arrived! The warmer weather means that more motorcycles will be on the roads. Unfortunately, riding motorcycles is risky. Though they represent only 3% of registered vehicles, motorcycles account for almost 14% of all vehicle fatalities.

Are you planning to hit the open road on your bike this spring? Follow these five safety tips to stay safe.

- 1. Gear up: Always wear a DOT-approved full-face helmet, gloves, boots and eye protection.
- 2. Be seen and heard: There's an old saying in the motorcycle world that loud pipes save lives. That's because it's tough for drivers to see motorcyclists. To increase your visibility, wear bright-colored clothing and always use your headlights.
- 3. Be cautious at intersections: Slow down before approaching and pay attention to all oncoming traffic at intersections.
- 4. Stay alert: Always be aware of your surroundings. Pay attention to drivers, the terrain you're riding over, potholes and railroad tracks.
- 5. Don't ride during bad weather: Rain makes roads slippery, increasing your risk of an accident. Avoid riding in bad weather if you can.

Always be alert, wear the proper safety gear and increase your visibility when riding. This will reduce your risk of a motorcycle accident.
